"A Bird in the Hand . . . "

This is Alabama Industry Week. Its purpose is to invite to the attention of Alabamians the importance to each citizen of industries already located here. The industries already located in Alabama are the industries which today lay the golden eggs of payrolls and taxes. How they fare, and how they are regarded, has a large bearing on the decision of other industries to locate in Alabama.

Materials, adequate help to process them, markets, transportation facilities, suitable plant sites and other things are important. Many communities in many states can compete equally in these fields. Often, however, when a location for expanding or for a new industry is under consideration, the decision sometimes rests on a report of the community's regard for existing industry. If the report is negative, and assuming that the existing industry merits regard, the new industry sometimes decides to go elsewhere.

Any community's existing industry (the bird in the hand) is worth many prospective industries (the birds in the bush). But the "birds in the bush" often are influenced by what happens to the "bird in the hand." If what happens is pleasant, new industries want to share the experience.

BLEED THROUGH POOR ORIGINAL

FRUITS OF PLANNING

The fruits of planning are security and peace-of-mind If you plan exactly how you will meet the emergency of bereavement in advance, it will not be as calamitous. One of the best ways to plan is to take out an Emergency Aid Burial policy. Then, for a few cents a day, all the planning and work that have gone into the construction of our new funeral home in Elba will be at your disposal when needed. The Emergency Aid will not only be able to offer a sympathetic hand and guidance, but will have the facilities to better carry out the duties of a funeral parlor Construction has been completed on our building, which includes a modern chapel that will seat 100 persons. Plan now to have our services at your call by investigating an Emergency Aid Burial policy. Then the fruits of our planning, represented by one of the most modern funeral parlors in Southern Alabama will be at your disposal.

All famous horses aren't racers. Jumbo, a bay gelding who died in 1944, has been memorialized by Lederle Laboratories, Pearl River, New York, with a granite plaque, honoring his contributions to medical science.

Jumbo was purchased by Lederle in 1929 and until he was retired in 1940, he gave about 657 gallons of blood from which tetanus antitoxin and pneumonia antiserum were extracted. It is not possible to estimate how many lives this one horse saved with his blood.

Jumbo lived a veritable "life of Riley" at the vast Lederle plant. When purchased, he weighed 1,400 pounds, and when he died he tipped the scales at 2,000 pounds. He stood 16 hands high. From 1940 to 1944, during his retirement, Jumbo was a pet at the plant and had full run of the stables.
